IMPORTANCE

of proactive training

Bereaved employees often describe how the toughest part of returning to work is the inability to be authentic in their grief. Coworkers are often uncomfortable and unsure how to behave. It's critical for business leaders to understand grief and adopt protocols that support employees during life challenges. Sensitivity training and getting everyone on the same page of emotional intelligence will minimize disruption, preserve corporate culture, and save dollars in both risk management and employee retention.

ABOUT

the curriculum

IGI Certified Grief Educator curriculum includes 20 modules that cover core knowledge of grief, resilience, and corporate strategies that minimize risk management and maximize workplace safety. Each 90-minute module is followed by an online exam to test understanding and ensure competency to teach as a certified IGI educator. Students will learn:

- How to teach corporate strategies for handling employees facing a personal crisis
- How to minimize risks and maximize workflow during employee crises
- How to preserve and improve corporate culture related to employee crises
- How to incorporate corporate protocol as part of internal policies and procedures
- How to market and teach your own workshops

TUITION

information

Full tuition is $3,900 divided across 20 modules at $195 each. This allows students to pay as they go. Students can save $400 by paying in full at time of registration. Tuition is payable by debit or credit card, PayPal, and check (U.S. funds only).

HOW TO

complete certification

Individuals seeking to earn professional certification as an IGI Grief Educator must:

- Enroll in the curriculum
- Complete all coursework within one year
- Earn 80% or better on each competency exam
- Teach one community workshop and submit student surveys back to IGI for review. This is an exercise that demonstrates that the participant successfully applied the IGI curriculum within our level of standard for IGI certification.

Successful graduates will be endorsed as an IGI Certified Grief Educator and be authorized to teach IGI's Managing Grief in the Workplace workshops in corporate, institutional, and academic settings of their choice.
